PROGRAMME NOTES

Overture to ‘The Caliph of Baghdad’

Andantino

Francois-Adrien Boieldieu (1775 – 1834)

Boieldieu’s many operas formed the basis of the French Opera Comique tradition of the Nineteenth Century. He was born in Rouen, France in 1775, and after arriving in Paris in 1795 became renowned as a pianist and composer of popular songs. In 1797 he was appointed Piano Professor at the Conservatoire and gained popularity with his output consisting of two operas annually and a quantity of music on revolutionary themes for state occasions.

The opera Le Calife de Baghdad was a fashionably exotic opera which was hugely successful when first performed in Paris in 1800. Boieldieu over his lifetime composed some forty operas, more than a hundred songs with piano accompaniments, nine piano sonatas, duos for harp and piano and a concerto for harp and piano. His greatest success was his 1825 opera, La Dame Blanche (The White Lady), based on Sir Walter Scott which had more than 1700 performances in Paris alone before 1914 and was also produced in London and New York.

Serenade for Strings in E Major Op. 22

Antonin Dvorak (1841 – 1904)

I Moderato - Trio
II Tempo di valse
III Scherzo - vivace
IV Larghetto
V Finale – allegro vivace

Dvorak, born in a Bohemian village where his father was an inn keeper and butcher, followed Smetana as the leading exponent of Czech musical nationalism firmly within the traditions of Central Europe. His early musical training was followed by employment for some years as a violinist, for a time under Smetana, and this was followed by a life primarily devoted to composition, in which he was positively encouraged by Brahms.

This popular Serenade for Strings in E Major Op. 22 was written in twelve days in 1875. As a genre the Serenade has been in existence since around 1560, but has moved rapidly on from the lover “serenading” underneath the window to a work where the composer can capture the atmospheric essence of the Serenade by using compact forms and a limited number of orchestral players.
The warm melody of the first movement anticipates the mood of the whole work, while in the second movement the lightly hovering waltz with mazurka elements contrasts with a sad wistful middle section. The high spirited Scherzo has a yearning middle section, while the Fourth Larghetto movement has been described as ‘gentle nostalgia’ and introduces the theme which is taken up by the cellos in the Finale. This gets off to an explosive start, and after a brief meditative reminiscence look at the first movement the Finale is brought to a turbulent close.

Symphony No 2 in D Major Op. 36

Ludwig van Beethoven (1770 – 1827)

Adagio molto – Allegro con brio
Larghetto
Scherzo - allegro
Allegro molto

By his thirtieth year, Beethoven was well established in Vienna as a composer, teacher and pianist. However, suffering from advancing deafness, he became increasingly depressed and in 1802, the year he completed this Second Symphony, he also wrote the famous Heiligenstadt Testament. Written from the village of Heiligenstadt, in pastoral surroundings outside Vienna, recommended as therapy by his doctor, the Testament acknowledged his affliction and the terror it held for him.

As in his First Symphony of two years earlier, Beethoven was relatively cautious in the Second, remaining close to the standard set by Joseph Haydn and Mozart. There is virtually no sign of the changes that would soon be unleashed on the musical world, nor is there, among the carefree sunny melodies, any hint of the personal difficulties he was suffering. For this reason, the Second Symphony is regarded as a testimony to extraordinary courage, written as it was in the darkest time in what continued to be an unhappy life.

At the premiere on April 5, 1803 in Vienna with Beethoven himself conducting, audience reaction was mixed, and even later performances found little critical consensus. One Leipzig reviewer referred to the Finale as “a repulsive monster, a wounded tail-lashing serpent dealing wild and furious blows while it stiffens into its death agony”. The Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung praised the work as “full of new and original ideas”.
This Second Symphony is of much greater scope than any preceding Mozart or Haydn Symphony. The Introductions are more lengthy, the concluding Cadas more extensive, and it anticipates the grandeur of Romantic Symphonies yet to come. The traditional third movement Minuet is dispensed with for the first time in this work and replaced with a Scherzo ('joke'), a vibrant movement with more verve and energy than some conservative critics may have found quite comfortable.
